From the National Intelligencer.

A more detailed statement of the proceedings in the Circuit Court of the district of Columbia.

Mr. IONES, the U. S. attorney, prefased his motion on Friday with an address to the following effect.

He requested leave to interrupt the ordinary business of the court by introducing a motion relative to a subject calculated, from its importance, to fix the most ear. nest attention, and to excite the profound. est interest.

Two persons have been arrested in a distant territory of the U.S. and brought within the jurisdiction of this court, chargod with being principal actors in the execu. tion of an abominable plot against the union, and in a treasonable and atrocious enterprize of hostility against the territory and citizons of these states. The city of New Orleans appears to have been the most important point of attack meditated in the first instance by the conspirators. General Wilkinson, the commander in chief, hastens with his army to defend the place. While exerting all the zeal and activity of a vinilant and able commander, of a brave and faithful soldier, to make every requisite military preparation against assaults from without, he deteets certain emissaries within the very walls of his fortress, engaged in the most criminal and michievous acts of co-eperation with the expected assailants; he orders Erick Ballman and Samuel Swartout, two of those emissaries who were supposed to have demonstrated their treasonable purpose by the most uo. equivocal zets, to be seized and sent to the seat of government under a military guard. Immediately on their arrival it is determined by the executive government to transfer the custody of the prisoners from the military to the civil power.

There is no reason to doubt the authori. ty of a military commander, actually engaged in the suppression of a treasonable enterprize against the U. S. to seize upon traitors whom he detects, flagrante delicto, nation, but that authority arising from ne. cessity and the exigencies of the publisafety, must sease when an opportunity offers for the quiet and cenvenient, and at the same time efficient administration of justice in the ordinary way. It is therefore that, without hesitation or delay, in. structions are given instantly to mave this court for a judicial warrant to arrest those persons and place them in the custody of the law. In support of this motion two depositions, solemnly sworn to by general Wilkinson, would be read to the court. These documents will explain the grounds upon which he proceeded to arrest and detain the prisoners.

Mr. Jones observed that owing to the sudden and unexpected manner in which this task had develved upon him, he had not even perused these documents and could therefore apprise the court of their contents in no other way than by reading them in evidence.

[Two depositions of general Wilkinson were then read to the court, both of which have been published in the National In. telligencer, accompanied by the president's messages of the 22d and 24th of

The court, after examining the depositions, enquired of Mr. Jones with what specific offence he proposed the prisoners should be charged in the warrant?

He answered "I accuse them of the crime of treason against the U. States, and move that they be arrested upon that charge."

The court suggested that the depositions read in evidence, might apply either to a appointing efficers, preparing military sharge of treason, of misprison of treason, or to a charge of violating the act of coagress which prohibits the setting on feet military expeditions against foreign nations. If treason be made the specific a levying of war in fact. It is sufficient charge, is there any evidence of an actual if they present what is termed the speciem levving of war against the U. S. within the belli, if they show themselves in the post-

meaning of the constitution? diffidence he could presume to answer the | barbarous language, is made between the suggestions of the court upon a topic so Bellum levatum, and the Bellum percusimportant, so difficult, and so little explor- sum. It is the Bellum levatum that is in. ed as the dectrine of treason under the tended by our constitution to be fixed as constitution. It was obvious to the court the least demonstration of that species of hew entirely unpremeditated his remarks treason. When the bare fact of levying war must be. He could pretend to no accura- is ascertained, it is then to be enquired ey er depth of research, as he had never | quo animo? With what intent and against firmation of this, the chief magistrate, been placed in circumstances to render the whom? In England if the intent be to study of that branch of criminal jurispru. levy war against the king it is high trea. dence, an object of any particular atten. son under the statute of Ed. 3. In this of the nation, has in a formal message to tion. Thus suddenly and unexpectedly country if the intent be to levy war aginst both houses of congress, announced the finition of treason, as might tend to set ther of those laws, a levying or actual me sonant re the plain understanding and common sense of mankind, and applicable to the purposes of practical utility. He could derive little aid from the learning extant on the subject, but must rely upon some unexamined impressions and recollections from general reading.

The fact to be accertained in the first place, is the treasonable intent. The evidence is conclusive to that point, for although the conquest of the Spanish province of Mexico is avowed as the ultimate object of the enterprize, yet the seizure and plunder of New Orleans, as an intermediate step for supplying the means of accomplishing that object, is as explicitly avowed. The only active participation of the treason, in which the two emissaries Bollman and Swartout appear to have been clearly detected at New Orleans, is an infamous and abortive attempt upon the honor and fidelity of the commander in chief. This, however criminal, may be said to be, in itself, no overt act of treason, no levying of war against the U. S. Agreed; it is not necessary to contend otherwise in order to shew that the prisoners should be arrested and committed as traitors. It is clear from the evidence that they are leagued and confede. rated in his atrocious projects, with Aaron Burr, the notorious head and leader of the conspirators. They are active and ac. knowledged agents and participators in the plot. Then suppose they are detached, from the main body, to execute, at New Orleans, a quiet and noiseless scheme of treachery and corruption; suppose them to be personally engaged in no attempt of open violence; yet, while they are thus employed, their confederates assembled in arms, some hundred miles higher up the Mississippi, at Natchez, or on the hanks of the Ohio near Marietta, commit a clear act of treason by levying war against the U. S. in the strictest sense of the phrase. Could it be doubted that the spies and e. missaries employed at a distance from the scene of action, however secret and bloodless the immediate object of their mission, and to detain them securely till they can if it be a part-executive of the same treabe subjected to judicial process and exami- | sonable plot, would be involved in the guilt of their confederates? The question is not in what degree the mere insulated act of attempting to seduce a high military commander from the allegiance of honor & the fidelity of patriotism, is criminal or punishable; but what lengths have their known confederates proceeded in the coexecution, by more overtacts of the same treasonable conspiracy?

The constitutional definition of treason should not be constructed to restrict that offence to cases only of actual violence or aseault. The terms "levying war," have been long used in a more extensive sense both in commen parlance and in the lan. guage of jurists. The words of the En. glish atstute of Ed. 3. are literally adopted in our constitution. The ablest and most impartial commentators upon that statute, the most approved jurists who have writ. ten upon the law of nations, in explaining what acts of the subject against the sorereign, or what acts of one severeign against another, constituted actual larving of war, have never considered the shock of battle, the encounter of armies, or the interchange of blows to be indispensible or essential. War may be levied in the 19ceived sense of the term and not a blow be struck, not a town be invested, nor an inch of territory invaded nor usurped. What shall constitute a levying of war depends upon so many and such various facts and circumstances, that it would be in vain to attempt an enumeration of every sup. peseable case. It seems never to have been questioned however, that such unequiveral acts as the enlisting of soldiers, equipments, warlike steres and provisions -or the assembling is considerable num. bers in warlike array armed with military weapons for a hostile purpose, constituted ure of war; an intelligible and rational Mr. Joses said, it was with the utmost distinction, though expressed in rather called upon, he sould hazard only such de. the United States, it is treason against existence of such a state of things. That sultory remarks upon the constitutional de- them under the constitution. Ite ing of war between any cumber eth yiduals, if with no intege to levy or any treasonable design against the amounts not to treason but will be demeanor or felony, according to lengths they proceed, from a riot breach of the peace to murder. Then no real difference in the meaning of phrase as repectively used in the Eng statute and in the American constitut -if any false glosses have been put or it in the one case, let them at once bete jected, and a sound rational and legium construction be adopted. There is to pretence for supposing that the criteri referred to, as to what acts have been de termined to constitute a levying of war within the meaning of the English status is the result of any of those criminal com pliances by which their cours have been reproached with sacrificing victims to toy. al vengeance by means of arbitary, forces and uncatural constructions. On the contrary, it is sanctioned by the most au. exceptionable precedents, and by the authority of their ablest jurists.

So if one state arms is an extraordia. ry manner, and draws together her forces so as to assume the posture of wat ;the instant it is manifested that the arms. ment is destined against another state, it is denominated a levying of war by onagainst the other, before a single act of violence or open hostility is committed; and the state so menaced may annipale the blow and lawfully attack the other .-Yet the one that FIRST levied war, the' sus, taining the first open attack, would be deemed the aggressor.

To this doctrine it is conceived that legislative construction almost coeval with the constitution and acquiesced in by the nation, has added a most respectable con roboration. In the year 1794, congress pass an act punishing, with fine and inprisoament, persons guilty of the offence -1st, of fitting out and arming any vessel with intent to cruise and commit her, tilities against any foreign nation to amir with the U. S. 2dly. Of setting on fort and preparing the means for a military expedition against a foreign state in amity with the U. S. Yet these acts, perpetry ted by their own citizens against the U. S. are no where expressly ferbidden-no where enumerated among the crimes prohibited or rendered penal by the act of congress. At the very first session, hall under the present constitution, a law was passed for punishing treason. piracies and various other crimes-bur no mention is made of any such offences, as fitting out armed ships, and setting on foot military expeditions with intent to commit hostile ties against the U. S. It follows either that these acts may be committed with unquestioned impunity, or that they amount to levying of war, and so constitute the crme of treason. That the same indications of hostility should be made highly spenal, when directed against a foreign nation, but be deemed innocent or remediless when directed by their own citizens against the U.S. would be an absurdit too monstrous to be susposed of our pe ual code. The more rational conclusion is that they are comprehended on viter mini, in the crime of devying war against the U. States. As to the question of fact whether any treason, consisting of a levying war a gainst the U. S. has been committed by the prisoners or their confederates; it is presumed sufficient evidence appears to warragt an arrest and commitment. At existing state of belligerency, whether of a war de fasto, or preclaimed by manifes. to; a war of rebellion, or between two sovereign states; a war merely levied, of flegrant war accompanied by open violence and actual hostility; under any of these modifications it is generally so far a matter of public notoriety that all the ions. tionaries of the state engaged must take notice of it ex officie. The common te. port and public notoriety of a matter, in which the state in its sovereign capacity and every individual citizen are so in! mately concerned, furnish a prima facili presumption su creat te warrant the lucipient process preliminary to prosecution. It was in fact a matter of public astoriety that the conspirators, of whom the prisoners are the active confederates, have enlisted soldiers, issued commissions, set on foot a military expedition, and is fact have assumed the posture of war-or in other words, have 'levied war.' In conwho is constitutionally authorised to give official information to congress of the state communication alone luraished to the

Mr. Joues mentioned that his occupanoas had not yet allowed him to peruse the president's message-it being publish. ed only that morning. He could only state its general import from hearsay. The message was at length produced and read by him to the court.]

The entel judge, doubted in the first place, whether the president's message did in fact appounce the levying of war; and if it did, whether the court could proseed in asy manner upon such information, without intringing the sixth article of the amendments to the constitution, which de. clares " that no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath

The second of actual opposition to the laws

committed by Burr and his associates, it is they have proceeded to the execution of that intent, they unquestionably have incurred the penalty of treason. There can be no pretence that they are merely a com-bigation of rioters assembled to obstruct the due execution of the laws. The act of congress authorising the president to call forth the militia, fornishes one important principle applicable to this case. He can only exercise that power in case of ac-

Erick Bollman and Samuel Swartout had been seized in one of the territories of the United States, by orders of the commander of the army of the U. States, as persons engaged in treasonably levying war against the U. States, that the persons so seized were, during the last night, brought into this county under a military guard, and were yet detained under guard until they could be proceeded against in due course of law; that the secretary o war had immediately issued written orders to the officers of the guard, to deliver those persans, on demand, to the marshal of this distrist; and the marshal now waited for legal authority to take charge of them. Wherefore the U.S. attorney moved the court to issue a warrant to arrest the said Erick Bellman and Samuel Swartout, on a charge of treason, in order that they may be brought before the court and examined and committed, or otherwise dealt with according to law, And in support of his motion the U. States attorney read to the court the depositions of James Wilkinson, brigadier general and commander in chief of the armies of the United States, which depositions are filed in this

All which being read and heard, the court took time till to morrow to consider of the said motion.

Departed this life, at Dumiries, on the 30th ultimo, Mr. C. H. Muschett, merchant, of that place, in the 26th year or his age, after a short but severe illness. He has lett a number of connectious and acquaintances to deplore his less.

Among the many salutary laws passed last session by the Virginia legislature, is the following :- " A person taking the prison rules for twelve months shall be re-committed to " close jail unless he pays the deet, or is dis-" charged under the insolvent debtors act."-This regulation is peculiarly proper in a state where lands are not subject to be taken in execution for debt, and where too frequently the unfortunate creditor has no other means of enforcing the decision of the law in his favor but by taking the person of his dishenest debtor. Something of the kind ought to be engrafted into the insolvent law for the district of Columbia, as part of the district derives its laws from Virginia; and, deprived as its inhabitants are of the right of suffrage, it would be lamentable indeed were they not to keep pace with the citizens of their parent state in such a praise worthy improvement in their judicial code.
